Descendancy for Rev. David Dudley Field & Submit Dickinson with occupations, professions & political offices
March 2014

The more interesting or influential professions are highlighted in yellow as they are known. Surnames, using women's married surnames where appropriate, are highlighted in pink to easily sort through those with a yellow highlighted item. If a married woman goes by her maiden name, it is highlighted instead, and if a woman has never married that is also stated. The more ordinary professions and occupations, as known, are listed, but are not highlighted.

I. Rev. David Dudley FIELD; [*Portrait at findagrave.com] was an author, writing "A History of the Towns of Haddam and East Haddam, Connecticut,""Statistical Account of the County of Middlesex, Connecticut" (1839), "History of the Brainard Family" (1857), "The County of Berkshire" (1829), and "History of Pittsfield" (1844). Between 11 Apr 1804 and 1818 Rev. David Dudley FIELD was the pastor at Congregational Church, Haddam, Middlesex, Connecticut, there is a plaque as you enter this church which reads, "In Memory of The Rev. David Dudley Field and of his wife, Submit Dickinson and to commemorate their nine children, six of whom were born in this village." He was a missionary in the western part of the state between 11 Apr 1818 and Sep 1818 at New York. He was the pastor, who served when the building standing in 2002 was erected, between 25 Aug 1819 and 1837 at First Congregational Church, Stockbridge, Berkshire, Massachusetts. He was called to be the pastor again of the Congregational Church between 11 Apr 1837 and 1844 at Haddam, Middlesex, Connecticut. Between 1844 and May 1851 at Higganum, Middlesex, Connecticut, Rev. David Dudley FIELD was called to be the pastor of the new Congregational church, established when the Haddam church was divided into two.

A. David Dudley FIELD Jr. On 10 Mar 1828 New York, New York, New York, David Dudley FIELD Jr. started his law practice as an attorney; he was later best known for reforming the legal practice of New York by preparing a code of procedure. He also worked on these for both federal and international purposes. He found a job for his brother, Cyrus West FIELD, at A.T. Stewart's great dry good store in April 1835. In 1847 David Dudley FIELD Jr. served as a delegate to the national Democratic convention and introduced the "Cornerstone" resolution at Syracuse, Onondaga, New York. He was associated with his son, Dudley FIELD, as an attorney after 1854 at New York, New York, New York. In 1860 David Dudley FIELD Jr. served as a delegate to the national Democratic convention at Chicago, Cook, Illinois. He was probably the reason Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd, his brother, was nominated to the Supreme Court. David writes in his diary on 27 February 1863, "went to Washington to get my brother, Stephen, a place on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States." David then mentions a few days later on 5 March 1863 that Stephen was nominated and then on 10 March 1863 that he was confirmed. In 1877 David Dudley FIELD Jr. served as a United States representative to Congress at New York.

   e. Rachel Lyman FIELD; *[Portrait photo at findagrave.com] was a poet, novelist and author of children's books. She turned to children's writing at the suggestion of several publishers who, while rejecting her first novel, praised her account of the heroine's childhood. Her first books in the field were of poems: "The Pointed People" (1924), illustrated by her own silhouettes; "Eliza and the Elves" (1926); and "Little Dog Toby" (1928), again with her own illustrations. Three volumes of adult verse followed, incorporating some of her contributions to the "New Yorker" with "Conning Tower" and "World: Points East" (1930), "Branches Green" (1934), and "Fear Is the Thorn" (1936). She also continued with playwriting, publishing "The Cross-Stitch Heart, and Other Plays" (1927) and "Patchwork Plays" (1930), a collection for children. Meanwhile, she had turned her growing abilities and her understanding of children to the writing of "Hitty, Her First Hundred Years" (1929), a story built around an indestructible wooden doll which she and her friend, Dorothy Lathrop, had found in a New York antique shop. The book's publication, through Macmillan's newly created juvenile department, the first in the publishing industry, marked a dawning recognition that children's literature was real literature. She followed "Hitty" with "Calico Bush" (1931) and "Hepatica Hawks" (1932). The impulse to try adult fiction was hard to resist, so she went on to "God's Pocket" (1934), a novel based on the actual diary of a Maine sea captain, Samuel Hadlock Jr. Next came "Time Out of Mind" (1935). In 1938, she wrote "All This, and Heaven Too", a novel based on the story of her aunt, Henriette, who married her grand uncle, Henry Martyn Field. This book sold well over 350,000 copies and was made into a successful film, starring Charles Boyer and Betty Davis. Her last novel, "And Now Tomorrow," a love story, appeared in 1942 and was published after her death. Also published after her death was "Prayer for a Child" (1944), which was written for her adopted daughter, Hannah. She was employed by Famous Players-Lasky, a film company, in the editorial department writing synopses of books and plays between 1918 and 1923 at New York, New York, New York. b. David Dudley FIELD was employed by New York Telephone Company between 1930 and 1940.

c. Sarah Virginia FIELD
d. Stephen Johnson FIELD
5. Sara Adele FIELD
F. Stephen Johnson FIELD 1st
G. Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd was an author of two books as well as one other that was not published, but was rather printed for a few friends. The title of this book is, "Personal Reminiscences of Early Days in California, with other sketches" It was written in 1877. Between Dec 1829 and 1833 Smyrna (now Izmir), Turkey, Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd was a missionary, ministering to the sick during an outbreak of cholera. He picked up a fair knowledge of Greek, French, Italian and Turkish languages. He accompanied his brother-in-law and sister, Rev. Josiah BREWER and Emilia Ann FIELD in Dec 1829 at Smyrna (now Izmir), Turkey. He studied law in the law office of his brother, David in 1838 at New York, New York, New York. He was a partner in the law office of his brother, David between 1841 and 1848 at New York, New York, New York. He was an attorney in 1850 at Marysville, Yuba, California. Between 1850 and 1852 California Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd was a state assemblyman from the Yuba district, where he distinguished himself as a member of the Judiciary Committee of the 2nd California Legislature, which met at San Jose, California from January to April 1851. Stephen Field is credited with introducing the California Practice Act-Code of Civil Procedure, which established the judicial system for the state. In 1851 Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd became embroiled in a bitter personal dispute with appellate court judge, William R. Turner. Some of the details of what sparked the dispute have faded into history, but it was serious enough to provoke Field into publishing an attack on the judge. Turner responded by disbarring Field for disrespectful behavior, the first time any attorney had been disbarred in the state. Although the California Supreme Court subsequently reinstated him, Field never quite forgot the incident and a few years later, Field took revenge on Turner by securing a bill that reassigned the judge to a remote corner of the state. Between 1857 and 1859 Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd served as a justice of the state Supreme Court, winning the seat on the Democratic ticket at California. Between 1859 and 1863 California Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd served as the Chief Justice of the California Supreme Court, having ascended to the position after his predecessor, David Terry, was forced to resign for having killed Senator David Broderick in a duel. More than 30 years later, Terry himself would be shot to death and Field would be accused of participating in his murder. Between 10 Mar 1863 and 1897 Washington, District of Columbia, District of Columbia, Stephen Johnson FIELD 2nd served as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court appointed by President Lincoln, despite criticism of Field's controversial term on the California Supreme Court. Lincoln needed somebody to uphold the Union's wartime measures against the South and Field seemed to fit the bill. Although Field's decisions were largely favorable to the North during the war, his votes took on a strong Southern streak in the Reconstruction. As a Democrat with his eyes on a possible run for the White House, Field favored the Democratic South with votes that limited the power of the military occupation forces and barred the North from requiring loyalty oaths from former Confederates. Field's decisions for big business also drew charges that he was rendering court votes on the basis of his political goals. He had been nominated to the court by Southern Pacific Railroad mogul, Leland Stanford, and Field constantly voted in favor of Southern Pacific interests before the court. It also didn't hurt that David, Stephen's brother, was influential in Washington and probably was the reason he was nominated and then confirmed by the Senate on 10 March 1863, just 4 days after President Lincoln named him. He was one of the first 12 Trustees in Nov 1885 at Stanford University, Stanford, Santa Clara, California.

H. Cyrus West FIELD. Between Apr 1835 and 1840 257 Broadway, New York, New York, New York, Cyrus West FIELD was employed by A.T. Stewart's great dry good store, a job that his brother, David Dudley, found for him and where he learned the business trade, starting as an errand boy and working up to a clerk. Between Mar 1840 and May 1840 Cyrus West FIELD was the founder of his own first paper manufacturing business at Westfield, Hampden, Massachusetts. He was employed by E. Root and Company as a junior partner; this firm failed almost immediately in Jun 1840 at 85 Maiden Lane, New York, New York, New York. He was the organizer of Cyrus W. Field and Company with his brother-in-law, Joseph F. Stone, as his partner. This paper making enterprise earned him $250,000 by 1853 between 1843 and 1853 at New York, New York, New York. In 1854 Cyrus West FIELD was the founder of the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, forming it with Peter Cooper, Moses Taylor, and Marshall Roberts, who each put in $20,000 and with Chandler White, who put in a lesser amount, but died the following year and was replaced by Wilson Hunt. This money went fast and eventually those who had contributed $20,000 to begin with had put in $200,000 and Cyrus' sum was even larger. He formed the Atlantic Telegraph Company, united himself with three other English gentlemen in 1856 at England. He was a merchant with property valued at $50,000 in Jun 1860 at Yonkers, Westchester, New York. He was a promoter of a submarine telegraph cable linking the United States with Australia and Asia by way of Hawaii circa 1870. He was telegraphing with property worth $50,000 in Jul 1870 at Greenburgh Township, Westchester, New York. He was in 1877 able to advance funds to his son, Edward Morse Field, an inexperienced stockbroker, to start a commodity firm with his son's brother-in-law, Daniel Lindley, who was an experienced stockbroker. The firm was called Field & Lindley. Between between 1877 and Oct 1886 Cyrus West FIELD was the president of the New York Elevated Railroad Lines. From its beginning, Cyrus fought for a uniform charge of five cents at all hours for passengers. His efforts were realized with a victory on the morning of October 1, 1886. He was able to finance New York City's first skyscraper, the Washington Building, into which his son's firm, Field & Lindley, moved circa 1879 at New York, New York, New York. He was the owner of two newspapers, "Evening Express" and "Mail", which were later merged to become the "Mail and Express" at New York, New York, New York. He speculated heavily in the commodity market, especially in his son's firm, Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Company, putting much of his personal wealth at risk in 1885.

6. Edward Morse FIELD Sr and Daniel Allen LINDLEY were partners in starting a commodity firm together. The firm was called Field & Lindley. Daniel was an experienced stock broker, but Edward was not, but Edward had the financial backing of advance funds from his father, Cyrus Field in 1877. He was a merchant in Jun 1877. He and Daniel Allen LINDLEY were still stockbrokers together in the firm Field & Lindley, but they moved the company into the Washington Building, New York's first skyscraper, which was funded by his Edward's father, Cyrus West Field circa 1879 at New York, New York, New York. On 26 Nov 1891 Edward's firm declared bankruptcy because his company had failed for $2,000.000. A suspicion of irregularities were confirmed and it appeared that Edward had pledged securities held in trust against loans he had negotiated to finance his market speculations.

d. Woolsey Hopkins FIELD; [*Portrait at findagrave.com] was a mining engineer in Jun 1900 at New York. He was an independent company worker, working on his own accord in Jan 1920 at New York City, New York (Manhattan Borough), New York. He was an exporter and importer in Apr 1922. He was involved between 1924 and 1925 at Caracas, Venezuela, in handling oil agreements for the United States government and coordinating the oil transfers between the two countries. He was involved between 1925 and 1932 at Havana, Cuba, with the construction of the 700 mile concrete highway from Pinar Del Rio to Santiago. The Republic of Cuba awarded this highway contract to the Warren Brothers Company of Boston, Massachusetts to lay Warrenite Bitulithic pavement on the Central Highway. Warren Brothers, one of the early financial backers of Henry Kaiser, subcontracted 200 miles of that highway, along with culverts and 500 bridges, to the Kaiser Paving Company (later Kaiser Industries). The total cost was about $75 million and its construction covered 4 to 5 years. It was doubtless the largest single road contract in the world at that time. The work started on March 2, 1927 when Woolsey's daughter, Rhoda, set off the first dynamite explosion. The work was completed a year ahead of schedule. Dr. Carlos Miguel de Cespedes, was the Cuban Secretary of Public Works at that time and Gerardo Machado was the President of Cuba. Woolsey's payment for his work on the highway was $200,000. After the highway was finished, Woolsey became involved in the gold mining there. Between 1932 and 1939
